From the late 1960s, the US Air Force investigated development of a new generation of jet fighters, to focus on the F-15 Eagle. The F-15 promised to be expensive, and so a group of Pentagon advocates pushed for a cheaper "lightweight fighter". This led to a competition between two demonstrator aircraft, the General Dynamics "YF-16" and the Northrop "YF-17". The YF-16 won the competition, with the Air Force then acquiring a large fleet of F-16 fighters. The US Navy, which needed a new fighter, took an interest in the lightweight fighter competition -- but selected the YF-17 instead of the YF-16, the YF-17 being a better fit to naval requirements. Northrop established a relationship with McDonnell Douglas (MDD) to develop a navalized derivative of the YF-17, which became the "F/A-18 Hornet". The Hornet went on to become the backbone of US Navy and Marine air power, and also was the basis for an enlarged derivative, the "Super Hornet". This document details the history of the Hornet family.
